Dear Chris,

I don't know exactly what happens with your systems, but I wanna to register because Google Analytics says that some traffic is comming from your site. When I enter I discover that the administrator of this website post a reply in one post that affects my agency.

If you don't want to allow my registration it's ok but remove the last post or delete completely the original post and say so sorry on your site for injuries to my agency.

If you don't do it, more than 1000 thousand registration from differents IPs register and post automatic posts. I personally go against you and your website.

So don't play with fire Chris or Dave or your own site for do idiotic things.

(Asian Mystique owner) if you don't want to destroy

Hi,

Thanks for your email, we appreciate the quick reply.

Sorry, things will remain as they are for the time being. Three separate security metrics pointed to false postings regarding your site (three accounts connected to one electronic presence). We will not tolerate false postings, period.

I will copy this message over to AM, since I'm sure that they appreciate the legitimate reviews and traffic that is [freely] sourced from TAG.

Kind Regards,
Chris

Hi,

Let's get something clear and I'm sorry if I missed something from your first post, TAG is not owned, funded or controlled by AM or any of AM's operators.

I assumed from your last message, you were part of AM's business. However, without a doubt, TAG is not a part of AM, period.

Any problems between you and AM, has nothing to do with our site.

Hello Again,

I really don't know how to handle this any further... TAG isn't related to AM in any manner.

Elijah (the real owner of TAG pays the bills) and that's all I can tell you. I support the site technically and administratively and that's as far as it goes...

The only contact we have had with AM's owner is via email after he filed a complaint about a negative review. That has been some time ago...

At this point, I don't feel comfortable in handling these messages. I'm copying the owner on this message and I'll let him add any other replies from here.

But honestly, you should have contacted us ahead of time and we could have verified your agency and allowed you a thread like we do from the ParlorClub guy.

For now, policy is policy and this remains in place for all TAG members and visitors.

To Elijah: You have the email chain, could you please handle the rest? - Apologies.

Regards,
Chris

Thanks for your email, we appreciate the quick reply.

Sorry, things will remain as they are for the time being. Three separate security metrics pointed to false postings regarding your site (three accounts connected to one electronic presence). We will not tolerate false postings, period.

I will copy this message over to AM, since I'm sure that they appreciate the legitimate reviews and traffic that is [freely] sourced from TAG.

Hi,

Well, this one I can respond to.

If you know anything about what you are talking about, of course it's a very well known framework and its quite dated. However, the technology used to run such forums like this is very simple and any basic tech with a basic grasp of security can crack something like this. PHP is weak and we didn't set out create a super-fortress of a public-forum.

All we are going to do is take a back-up and have a secondary location poised for launch.

We don't make any money from this operation, it's purely created for a clean independent view of p4p in Tokyo without a lot of influence from situations like this.

All-in-all, any attack on us is just more of an inconvenience than anything else. (or headaches for the server we're hosted on)

This is all like a flash back from a bad 4CHAN thread.

Kind Regards,
Chris

Hi,

Well, this one I can respond to.

If you know anything about what you are talking about, of course it's a very well known framework and its quite dated. However, the technology used to run such forums like this is very simple and any basic tech with a basic grasp of security can crack something like this. PHP is weak and we didn't set out create a super-fortress of a public-forum.

All we are going to do is take a back-up and have a secondary location poised for launch.

We don't make any money from this operation, it's purely created for a clean independent view of p4p in Tokyo without a lot of influence from situations like this.

All-in-all, any attack on us is just more of an inconvenience than anything else. (or headaches for the server we're hosted on)

This is all like a flash back from a bad 4CHAN thread.

Chris

Hello Again,

I really don't know how to handle this any further... TAG isn't related to AM in any manner.

Elijah (the real owner of TAG pays the bills) and that's all I can tell you. I support the site technically and administratively and that's as far as it goes...

The only contact we have had with AM's owner is via email after he filed a complaint about a negative review. That has been some time ago...

At this point, I don't feel comfortable in handling these messages. I'm copying the owner on this message and I'll let him add any other replies from here.

But honestly, you should have contacted us ahead of time and we could have verified your agency and allowed you a thread like we do from the ParlorClub guy.

For now, policy is policy and this remains in place for all TAG members and visitors.

To Elijah: You have the email chain, could you please handle the rest? - Apologies.

I don't know exactly what happens with your systems, but I wanna to register because Google Analytics says that some traffic is coming from your site. When I enter I discover that the administrator of this website post a reply in one post that affects my agency.

If you don't want to allow my registration it's ok but remove the last post or delete completely the original post and say so sorry on your site for injuries to my agency.

If you don't do it, more than 1000 thousand registration from different IPs register and post automatic posts. I personally go against you and your website.

So don't play with fire Chris or Dave or (Asian Mystique owner) if you don't want to destroy your own site for do idiotic things.
